Overview:

CIDCM seeks an in-country project manager for a USAID-funded project in Tamale, Ghana. The position offers an opportunity to gain valuable project management experience in support of a broader team comprised of academics and practitioners. We are seeking a self-motivated individual who will be proactive in solving project challenges and ensuring successful implementation.

Project Description:

The project aims to reduce the threat of extremist violence in northern Ghana by improving social trust and cohesion across identity group lines. CIDCM, in partnership with Washington State University, USAID, and local partners in Ghana, has designed a novel People-2-People approach to combat the increasing terrorist threat and achieve USAID objectives. We will conduct community-based intervention activities in approximately 20 different localities in the region, collecting pre- and post-intervention data and implementing other targeted research strategies to test the effectiveness of the interventions. The project will take place in multiple regions of northern Ghana, with headquarters in Tamale.

Responsibilities of the In-Country Project Manager:

The Project Manager will work closely with team members based at CIDCM, WSU, WANEP-Ghana, and NORSAAC-Ghana to ensure successful implementation of project activities, from data collection to interventions to evaluations. Strong candidates will have the following:

- Exceptional organizational skills
- Outstanding interpersonal and communication skills
- The ability to collaborate closely with individuals up, down, and laterally (with directors, field staff, USAID personnel, and US-based managers)
- Comfort/experience in a managerial or implementation role
- Familiarity with basic budgeting and spreadsheets

- The ability to work cross culturally
- Comfort/experience living in a provincial town in a low-income context
- Exposure to substantive issues related to peacebuilding and/or community-based activities
